Charles S. Mahan, M.D.
Dean and Professor Emeritus, University of South Florida, College of Public Health,
The Lawton and Rhea Chiles Center for Healthy Mothers and Babies

Dr. Charles S. Mahan’s colleagues consider him to be the champion of maternal and child health in Florida and a national leader in the field as well. Mahan founded The Lawton and Rhea Chiles Center at the University of South Florida (USF) where he is currently Professor Emeritus, to ensure intervention and implementation science for maternal and child health continues in the future.

Prior to his work at USF, Mahan was Florida’s State Health Officer under Governor Lawton Chiles’ leadership. In this role he implemented the first accountability measurement system for county health departments to identify their level of effectiveness and appropriate use of public funds. He substantially strengthened public health data systems to analyze birth and other health outcomes to identify where attention was needed. These efforts led to the creation of Florida Charts.

Mahan had an understanding that low-income, rural and minority neighbors were not receiving equal health care access. While working as Florida’s State Health Officer, he established the Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies initiative to develop quality prenatal and maternal health care for all women, especially minority and uninsured women.

Mahan was also influential in expanding the Medicaid income eligibility threshold for pregnant women from 100 to 185 percent of the Federal poverty rate. This greatly increased the number of women who could be served. In addition, he was able to persuade the Florida Legislature to increase Medicaid reimbursement rates that expanded the number of obstetricians willing to serve low-income women.

Mahan recognized that improving birth and maternal health outcomes requires community engagement and was instrumental in forming Florida’s Healthy Start Program to address these needs. This program established 30 coalitions throughout Florida to develop maternal and child health service delivery and fund allocation plans based on local issues and conditions. Healthy Start created better care for expectant mothers and infant children, resulting in a decrease in Florida’s infant mortality rate. In the 1990s Florida’s infant mortality rate finally measured below the national average for the first time. This innovative program was later implemented in other states.

“There is unlikely a community in Florida that has an organization dedicated to improving birth and child health outcomes that does not trace its existence back to Dr. Mahan,” said Edward A. Feaver, a former colleague at USF.

Also, as the State Health Officer in the late 1980s and early 1990s, Mahan led the public health response to the HIV/AIDS outbreak when there was almost no public understanding of or support for responding to the disease. In fact, Mahan was responsible for securing the first Ryan White Act grant for Florida. Monies from the grant provide HIV-related services for those who do not have sufficient health care coverage or financial resources for coping with HIV.

In addition to Mahan’s work in Florida, he directed national programs to improve maternal and child health outcomes. He is also currently the president of the National Board of Public Health Examiners (NBPHE), an organization he was instrumental in starting. NBPHE was the first organization to certify state and local public health agencies.

Josephine Mercado is considered to be “the first person to focus attention on a needs assessment for the Hispanic community” in Central Florida. When she arrived in Florida in 1999, she saw a great need for more timely and suitable medical care for the underserved in Central Florida, especially the Latino community. She founded Hispanic Health Initiatives, Inc. (HHI) to educate this underserved population and connect them with community organizations and government agencies that could assist the community in receiving the appropriate medical care. HHI focuses on providing these services in a culturally sensitive manner.

“Language and cultural barriers prevented access to health care for her neighbors,” said Peter Willems, director of operations, HHI. “Her foresight has led to several, successful linguistic and culturally competent chronic disease education programs.”

Mercado has a “take it to the community” philosophy. She believes education and assistance will be more readily accepted if offered in a style, place and time convenient to the community. For example, health messages and services from HHI are prepared in a linguistically correct and culturally sensitive manner for the predominantly Latino community. Information is presented and health screenings are conducted on Saturdays or evenings, when it is most convenient to the community. Other community organizations in Central Florida have been influenced by her approach.

Her collaboration with local health entities, including social service agencies, as well as private, nonprofit, government and nongovernmental agencies and others, has allowed HHI to thrive. With the collaboration of volunteer nursing students from the University of Central Florida (UCF), Mercado developed and started a health risk assessment program. Assessment participants receive glucose, cholesterol, Body Mass Index and vision screenings.

She has also implemented a Peer Health Educator program: a six-week chronic disease awareness training session for local community leaders who, upon completion, go back to their communities to teach friends, family members and neighbors about disease prevention and general health topics. As a result of this training, peer health educators have been able to ease language and cultural barriers, and significantly improve communications between the medical providers and the underserved members of their communities.

“It's Josephine's belief that medically disadvantaged communities need health literacy programs and activities where they can learn how to prevent and self-manage chronic disease, as well as how to navigate the health care system in order to play an active role at addressing their health disparities,” said Willems.

Since the inception of HHI, more than 500,000 Florida residents have been served. Early detection screenings valued at more than $400,000 have been conducted. In the future, Mercado would like to open a comprehensive community health and wellness center, focusing on linguistically and culturally competent health education, prevention skills and self-management of chronic disease.

Richard C. Moss
Administrative Volunteer, Citrus County Family Resource Center

Richard Moss is committed to his community and improving the lives of those who are in need. One of Moss’ greatest accomplishments was creating the Citrus County AIDS Coalition. His lifelong commitment to volunteering is vast.

“It is truly difficult to completely measure the total impact of Richard’s work in Citrus County,” said Lisa Strong, L.P.N., Citrus County Family Resource Center. “He is a visionary who takes an idea and makes it a reality.”

When Moss created the Citrus County AIDS Coalition in 1993, misinformation about the disease was vast, and the community had few resources to learn more about the disease or receive support. Even more important to Moss was making sure that no person with AIDS felt alone, especially near the end of their battle with the disease. He started the coalition from the ground up. Within the first year, he had developed policies, procedures and a volunteer handbook, which, most importantly, allowed persons with AIDS to have a place to turn to for assistance, referral and support. The organization still supports the community today.

During this time, Moss was also on the administrative board for the Ryan White Consortium, which was directly responsible for allocating funds to AIDS service organizations and assisting patients in locating the necessary medical treatment and services in the area. Through this work, he was able to lobby the health department board of directors for funds to establish an AIDS clinic at the Citrus County Public Health Department.

One of Moss’ proudest moments was creating the Sunshine Program more than 20 years ago. He established this program to create partnerships between home health care agencies, hospice and florists in the region. When a patient was having a hard time, a worker would contact their assigned florist to have a delivery sent to the patient to brighten their day. The program still operates today.

“For Richard, this program is about that one person receiving the flowers and having that little sense of joy in a time when what to come is inevitable,” said Ginger West, executive director, Citrus County Family Resource Center and nominator.

In 2010, a foundation gave the Citrus County Family Resource Center a donation with simple instructions to provide mammograms and Pap smear testing. Moss, a volunteer at the center, took this direction, created guidelines for an innovative cancer screening program, and established partnerships with the proper medical services and hospitals in the area. The result of his amazing work was the establishment of the Connections Clinic, which to date, has screened over 60 patients and successfully referred 90 percent for mammograms, as well as follow-up care.

In addition to volunteering, Richard is studying full-time at the University of South Florida. As the administrative volunteer at the Citrus County Family Resource Center his duties include grantwriting, program development and administrative work. Richard’s other work includes grant administration with the Boys and Girls Club, serving as an instructor for disaster services and sitting on the advisory board for the American Red Cross, Hernando Chapter. He has also volunteered with the United Way.

Teen Xpress is a 40-foot mobile health unit staffed by a multidisciplinary team of professionals that provides comprehensive medical and mental health care, free-of-charge, to adolescents and teens at four public schools in two of Orlando’s most impoverished communities – Parramore and Pine Hills – where 75 to 93 percent of the student populations qualify for free or reduced lunches.

- 93 percent of the students served by Teen Xpress live near or below the poverty level
- 55 percent reported that they had not seen a physician for over one year

The team’s holistic approach to wellness provides a convenient model of care for youth who lack access to basic health resources.

Notable Achievements:

Cared Vision Program
Vision is Priceless Council

The Cared Vision Program provides eye care to adults and children who have been identified as having a vision problem or signs of eye disease and do not have access to quality health care. Some patients may be eligible to receive part or all of these services at no cost, as a part of the Cared Vision Network. The program is a special cooperative effort between the Vision Is Priceless Council (VIP) and a growing network of local eye care professionals who’ve agreed to serve qualified clients free of charge.

Notable Achievements:

- Without the Cared Vision Program, the only program of its kind in Northeast Florida, individuals with no access to eye care would simply forgo vision care, and many would eventually lose their sight.
- In 2011, VIP formed partnerships with two corporations, Vistakon and Marco Ophthalmic, to offer free eye clinics in Jacksonville. Each business provides volunteer medical professionals and eye lanes with the most advanced equipment available at their facilities.
- The program serves uninsured patients needing more advanced care, like cataract surgery and laser treatments for retinal issues, at the Florida Retina Institute, Baptist Healthcare and St. Vincent’s Healthcare.
- In 2012, VIP expects to provide services through the Cared Vision Program for approximately 800 individuals, including 900 exams and 800 pairs of glasses.

“In four years, VIP has more than tripled the number of clients it has been able to serve, without increasing its budget, through developing partnerships; first by individual providers, then small nonprofit partners and now large global corporations.”

Susan Mattox, Executive Director, Vision is Priceless Council

Services Provided:

- Free or low-cost eye examinations to those who qualify
- Free or low-cost eyeglasses based on need
- Encourage medical volunteers to use their facilities throughout Northeast Florida to offer convenient access to eye care for underserved individuals in the community
- Work with at-risk groups in the region to ensure eye care is a priority, as well as provide services in a linguistically sensitive manner

- Sustained a 25 percent reduction in non-urgent, uninsured emergency department (ED) visits generating $1.45 million in cost savings, annually, despite a 16 percent increase in the number of uninsured Orange County residents.
- Decreased the number of homeless patients accessing local hospital EDs by 27 percent and, of that number, 68 percent who kept their scheduled appointment with a primary care provider did not return to the ED.
- Reduced the average per patient cost to Orange County for health care services from $2,000 to $157.
- Achieved a 98 percent patient satisfaction rate with 95 percent of all patients self-reporting an improvement in their overall health.

“The strength of PCAN is the strong collaboration between the 22 partner agencies including local government, hospital providers, safety net providers, business coalitions, health alliances, foundations and specialty providers whose primary mission is to ensure access to care for vulnerable populations in Orange County focusing specifically on the uninsured and underinsured.”

Cindi Kopelman, Past President at Shepherd’s Hope, Inc., a PCAN partner agency

Services Provided:

Through a network of 10 FQHC medical homes, 10 acute care clinics, one chronic care medical home, one secondary care clinic and one respite care center, PCAN offers: internal medicine, pediatrics, family practice, geriatrics, obstetrics/gynecology, general and pediatric dentistry, pharmacy and laboratory services (on-site and referral), case management, eligibility assistance, patient education, immunizations, translation, family planning and limited medical transportation, as well as over 30 specialty fields (e.g., orthopedics, radiology, pulmonary, oncology, cardiovascular, etc.).
